MANCHESTER NEWS.

At about midnight of Sunday the "Jeems' showed outward and visible manifestations of a disturbed nature, and in an hour or so it was evident that that noble stream was on a "bust." It got on a high horse, invaded many dry nooks and corners, and its face assumed that reddish hue so often indicative of dissipation, and especially with the 'Jeems." Manchester would have been perfectly quiet but for this deviation; but when the numerous citizens who daily visit the invigorating fountains of the city at or about 12 o'clock, applied for their ice-water, they found it so muddy that they repudiated it, resigned from the temperance society, and called for cologne or cocktails. The Dispatch reporter asked the evercourteous Bob Crittenden, at the toll-gate, if he didn't feel alarmed at the rapid and unexpected rise in the river. He replied, "Oh, no. This is not the first time that the Jeems or a Jeems has been on a 'bust,' and I'm used to their antics." The reporter fled incontinently towards Manchester, and returned by the Free bridge.
